Kevin Johnson has represented the United States as Consul General in Toronto, Canada since August of 2009. Joining the Foreign Service in 1983, Mr. Johnson served in 8 Embassies in Europe and Latin America as well as in Washington before coming to Canada.

The future valuation for the US dollar in world currency markets is a concern to many. The Consul General will address the latest in the ongoing discussions about preferential purchasing by segments of the US economy.

He will also discuss security issues particularly as it relates to cross border movement of products and raw materials.
